EXPLANATION:

- Line 1: Declares that this document is an HTML5 file.
- Line 5: Sets the text that appears on the browser tab.
- Line 6–9: Starts the CSS block and sets clean, sans-serif fonts for the whole webpage.
- Line 10–15: Sets a fallback dark grey background color (#111111) and overlays it with wargame.jpg. It configures the image to center perfectly, never repeat, and remain fixed in place while the user scrolls.
- Line 16–19: Sets default text color to dark grey (#333333) and strips out default browser outer margins and inner padding.
- Line 22–25: Centers everything inside the <header> element and adds 40 pixels of space above and below it.

- Line 27–33: Styles the main title text. It makes it massive (65px) and white, adds a sharp red secondary shadow combined with a soft black shadow for a 3D gaming aesthetic, and slightly squishes the letters together (-1px).
- Line 36–41: Constrains the navigation bar wrapper to a static width of 1150px. margin: 0 auto; centers this bar on the screen. It is given a light grey background with a subtle border.
- Line 43–54: Styles the navigation buttons so they sit side-by-side (inline-block). It clears out native button styling, adds spacing inside, puts a separator line on the right side of each button, and changes the mouse pointer to a hand indicator.
- Line 56–60: Dictates that when you hover over a button, or when a button has the .active class applied, its background instantly flips to dark charcoal and the text turns white.
- Line 63–67: Formats the main layout container table to exactly match the width of the navigation bar (1150px), centers it, and removes default spacing between table cells (border-collapse).
- Line 69–76: Styles the main column cell. It forces text to align to the top, claims 830px of the horizontal layout, and applies an almost solid white background (0.95 opacity) so text stays perfectly readable over the fixed background image.
- Line 78–82: Styles the sidebar cell. It takes up the remaining 280px width and adds an inner cushion on its left to prevent sidebar widgets from touching the main content panel.
- Line 84–89: Styles the header text displaying the current active category. It flushes it to the top, drops a thick red decorative line underneath it, and sets the font size to 24px.
- Line 92–97: Creates a white boxed block configuration for individual game entries, complete with a light grey outline and a 20px gap at the bottom to separate cards.
- Line 99–102: Instructs the mini-table inside each game card to stretch across the entire width of its container.
- Line 104–112: Splits the game card layout: exactly 180px is reserved on the left for the thumbnail image, while the rest goes to the description area on the right.
- Line 114–118: Hard-locks game thumbnails to a standard width of 180px and height of 115px, wrapped in a thin grey frame.

- Line 120–124: Removes default spacing around individual game titles, sizing them to 20px and painting them in classic hyperlink blue (#0056b3).
- Line 126–134: Styles the time indicators (e.g., "7 HOURS AGO") into a bold, white-on-grey rectangular badge.
- Line 136–140: Makes the category paths ("in Action, Adventure") smaller and muted grey.
- Line 142–146: Styles the game description summary paragraph with a clean 1.4 line-height ratio for easier reading.
- Line 149–152: Formats the sidebar search box to span full width and separates it from widgets below.
- Line 154–170: Allocates 70% of the space to the input text box and 25% to the blue "GO" submission button, styling both to align smoothly side-by-side.
- Line 172–178: Standardizes background frames for the ad and VPN modules in the sidebar.
- Line 180–187: Styles the titles of sidebar widgets with a solid blue bar and bold white text.
- Line 189–198: Forces widget ad banners to fit completely inside the sidebar container (width: 100%) without breaking the layout.
- Line 199–200: Closes out the style block and the page HTML head section.
- Line 201–206: Begins the main page content layout and inserts the styled textual banner centerpiece.
- Line 209–223: Generates the navigation bar row. Each button carries an onclick attribute that triggers the JavaScript function `changeCategory()`. It sends two things: this (the button element itself) and a string label identifying which game category array to pull up.
- Line 226–229: Opens the main two-column structural framework using a table row.
- Line 230–231: The critical zone on the left column cell. The empty `` acts as an empty canvas where JavaScript will dynamically write out HTML elements representing the games.
- Line 235–241: Opens the right column cell. Inside is a mock search bar form that points back to the current page address via #.
- Line 243–258: Houses standard graphic banner blocks for advertisements and a VPN promotion. It then closes up the table column cells, row, and table body framework.
- Line 260–262: Initializes a JavaScript `<script>` area containing a global object dictionary named `categories`.

- Line 263–326: Acts as a data store. Every key property name corresponds directly to a genre tab (e.g., home, action, racing). Inside each property is an array containing nested data objects that store details for each game title: name, upload timestamp, category strings, description text, and image paths.
- Line 329: Declares the `updatePage` function, which takes a single parameter (key) specifying which genre array should be loaded onto the screen.
- Line 330–331: Grabs references to the HTML components (cat-title header and game-list container) so their content can be overwritten.
- Line 334–338: If the selected category is 'home', it resets the main header to read "Latest Games". For other categories, it converts the key string to uppercase letters (e.g., turning "horror" into "HORROR") and updates the title.
- Line 341–344: Attempts to pull the game list matching the passed key. If someone passes a name that doesn't exist in the data store, it falls back to loading the default 'home' data array instead to avoid errors
- Line 347–349: Sets up an empty string template variable (`outputHtml`) and starts a standard loop that iterates through every game entry inside the selected category array.
- Line 350–353: Safety check: Grabs the game's image path. If the image path is missing or blank, it switches it to a placeholder image link instead to prevent broken image icons on the page.
- Line 355–370: The loop appends a long string of HTML formatting to `outputHtml` for each game. It injects the specific game properties (`currentImage`, `item.title`, `item.time`, `item.cat`, and `item.desc`) dynamically into the string.
- Line 372–373: After the loop finishes building the HTML string, this line writes the code directly into the empty game-list container, rendering the new cards on screen.
- Line 376: Defines the function triggered when a user clicks a navigation button.
- Line 378–381: Cleans up the navbar visually. It looks up all buttons using the class `.nav-btn` and clears out their active state by resetting their class names to just "nav-btn".
- Line 384: Applies the active styling rule to the single button that was just clicked, highlighting it.

- Line 387–388: Calls the main data rendering engine function (`updatePage`) with the selected category key string to load the new list of games.
- Line 391–393: An event handler that waits for the webpage files to completely finish loading in the browser, then triggers `updatePage('home')` to display the default home view.
- Line 394–396: Safely seals out script scopes, body markers, and document endings.
